ARCHITECTURAL ICONS, PAST AND PRESENT

Widely considered as one of the most recognisable buildings in Montreal, Canada, the Habitat 67 model community and housing complex was built in 1967 with Moshe Safdie at the helm and has been celebrated as a development of architectural significance ever since.

The Centre Pompidou in Paris, home to the largest collection of modern art in Europe, was built during the 1970s, yet still remains as an iconic symbol of architectural greatness, transforming the local neighbourhood of Marais into a district brimming with character.

Another modern classic in the making, the Marina Bay Sands integrated resort designed by Moshe Safdie has transformed the skyline of downtown Singapore since it first opened in 2010; its distinctive form has made it the most instantly recognisable high-rise in the cityscape.
